DIRECTIONS for PLANTING and CARE of GLADIOLUS

GLADIOLUS are easily grown, but first obtain good well matured bulbs, free from disease, from any reliable Grower or Seed Firm. Do not buy what may appear low in price, or unmatured bulbs and expect to raise beautiful flowers.

Prepare a trench about 5 inches deep and work into it a small amount of sheep guano. Place the large bulbs about 4 inches apart in the trench, pressing them firmly into the soil; smaller bulbs may be planted closer. Fill in the trench and watch them grow.

The Gladioli may be cultivated as soon as they appear above ground with shallow cultivation, increasing this in depth as the plants grow. When about 18 inches to 2 feet high some water may be required, cultivating at intervals. When the flower spikes appear and as buds start to open give plenty of water, wetting the ground thoroughly once a week at least and cultivate about two days after watering. Keep the ground firm and do not allow it to dry out and you will have real good results.

If large plantings are to be made, plant in rows 18 inches apart or closer if ground is not available.

HARVESTING

Probably the early plantings will be ready to dig the last of September, others in October or November. It is not necessary to wait until tops dry up, as some Gladiolus will stay green until freezing weather. As a rule, most Gladiolus are ready to dig in about 4 to 6 weeks after flowering or when tops start turning yellow. Dig with a fork, cutting the tops off close to the bulbs at once. Place in a slatted or screen bottomed tray and store in a cool, dry place away from frost and with a dry air circulation. Do not place too deep in trays as molding may occur. Watch the bulbs as they may need turning in about 10 days or so. As soon as the bulbs are dry enough the roots will come off easily. After this is done place them in the trays and keep in temperature between 36 and 40 degrees during the winter and your bulbs will be cured properly. Follow out these simple directions and you will have good results with your bulbs each season.

REGALE LILIES Bulbs and Seeds
